Contractor Risk Management for Transport & Logistics

The planning and implementation of efficient logistics is crucial in business to ensure that projects are well-planned, cost effective, and compliant with WHS obligations.

Chain of Responsibility legislation is of critical interest within the logistics industry. Understanding the responsibilities of every party within the chain places accountability on individuals at each level and performs a safety management function. This includes adherence to the Heavy Vehicle National Law and the underlying comprehension of legislation in order to control and reduce risk associated with speed and driver fatigue.

All members of the supply chain must ensure that a work contract or the terms of a contract do not result in, encourage, reward or be an incentive to break any road transport law. Every party involved in the supply chain who has influence over transport activities is responsible for road safety. They may be found legally liable for breaches to the regulation.

Managing Chain of Responsibility with Cm3 - Contractor Pre-qualification

Cm3 gives you the ability to manage all aspects of your logistics contractor compliance - online and visible across your whole business.

The Cm3 assessment team has extensive knowledge of transport safety systems and verifies all submitted documentation against legislative requirements - giving you confidence in the compliance of your logistics providers.

The dedicated, Australian-based customer service team does the heavy lifting requesting and verifying required insurances while the Cm3 platform gives you the flexibility to control required minimum insurance cover for individual suppliers.

From your own Cm3 site, clients can collect and verify any type of contractor licences or company documentation and even have contractors complete an online declaration of adherence to your policies and procedures if required.
